Psyche and Sound: The Use of Music in Jungian

Analysis • Patricia Warming, M.A., M.Div.

Monday, April 12 • 7:30 to 9:30 P.M.

Cornish North • 1501 Tenth Ave. E.

I feel that from now on music should be an essential part of every analysis. This reaches the deep archetypal material that we can only sometimes reach in our analytical work with patients. This is most remarkable.

—Dr. C.G. Jung

Throughout his life's work, Dr. C.G. Jung gave primacy to the psyche and its manifestation in dreams and imagination. In a letter Dr. Jung wrote in 1950, he added that music expresses in sounds what fantasies and visions express in visual images. This presentation will be an overview of the way in which music can help us to reach those deeper recesses of the psyche/soul that words often cannot touch. Work with sound and music can help to access memories, connect with deep emotions, facilitate work with imagery, and connect us to our bodies. This can help us to experience both the vibrational and psychic energies necessary for wholeness.

The program will include some video clips demonstrating the vibrational effects of sound on matter where we can observe archetypal patterns created solely by sound. We will engage in some listening exercises.

Patricia Warming is a Jungian analyst in private practice in Seattle. She received her graduate degrees from Princeton Theological Seminary and the C.G. Jung Institute in Zurich, Switzerland. Her college degree is in music. She is a member of Jungian Analysts •North Pacific and the International Association for Analytical Psychology. Warming is the author of an article entitled "Psyche and Sound" published in Music and Miracles, a new book compiled by Don Campbell.

and scholars. Sadly, psychologists have failed to understand very much about this rich source of archetypally symbolic material, material that is relevant not only to African Americans, but to people in all places and all times who struggle with issues of internal and external oppression.

In this presentation, Dr. Arthur Jones will sing a sampling of representative spirituals, interspersed with a discussion of the history of the cultural foundations of these songs, with particular attention to how their symbolic meanings and functions can be understood within a Jungian framework. He will be accompanied on piano by Ingrid Thompson.

Arthur Jones holds a Ph.D. in clinical psychology from the University of Iowa and maintains a part-time practice in Denver. He is a senior lecturer in the Department of Psychology at Denver University, where he teaches courses in Jungian and multicultural psychology. His singing career began in high school, when he sang with a select chorus of New York City singers and performed on television with the group. He was in a touring choir while in college, but then took many years off before returning to music. He has been a chorister with the Opera Colorado chorus and a tenor soloist at Washington Park United Methodist Church in Denver. Dr. Jones has found that his lecture-recital programs on African-American spirituals combines his interests as a teacher, scholar, and singer. Following a series of programs in the Denver area in the winter of 1992, Dr. Jones and Ingrid Thompson have given presentations in New York and Colorado. Dr. Jones' new book on spirituals, Wade in the Water, will be published by Orbis Books in August 1993.

Ingrid Thompson has been studying and playing piano since she was 10. She attended Whittier College and the University of Colorado at Boulder and graduated from Denver University's Lamont School of Music. She has been the organist and choirmaster at several Episcopal churches in Colorado and has studied with and accompanied Alethia Kisling.

Divine Trickster, Holy Fool: Agent Provocateur for the Self • David Hufford, M.A.

Friday, April 30 • 7:30 to 9:30 P.M.
Cornish North • 1501 Tenth Ave. E.
$5 members, $8 nonmembers

This lecture will explore the most elusive of archetypal images—the Trickster. A variety of examples, both mythological and clinical, including Native American Trickster figures, Hopi Clowns, Hermes, alchemical Mercurius, and Zen/Taoist fools and sages, will be used to help shed light on the vital role the Trickster plays as an agent for the Self. Trickster energy can be experienced in various ways—sometimes playful, sometimes destructive or demonic. But we shall see how it is ultimately in the service of individuation, through the relationship between the Ego and the Self. The more we can become aware of this energy in our own lives, the more it can be experienced as helpful rather than harmful.

David Hufford is a Jungian-oriented psychotherapist with a private practice in Seattle. He holds a master's degree in clinical psychology from Seattle University and has a background in spiritual studies and the visual arts. The focus of his work includes helping others with life transitions and relationship difficulties as well as issues of loss, grief, and renewal.

Jungiana

A Message from the President

The Jung Society welcomed 1993 at the traditional Twelfth Night Party in the lovely home of Nancy and Buster Alvord. Being surrounded by so many original art pieces seemed to foster a warm sense of connection and community among the guests. The evening was a time for longtime Jungian friends to meet again and rekindle their common interest in things Jungian. This led to various discussions about the Society, what members like, what they miss, what they would enjoy attending in the future.

For some, our presentations are too intellectual and, for others, not stimulating enough. Some would like to hear more well-known speakers while others wish to hear more local presenters. While the maxim holds true that you can't please all the people all the time, the Board and Program Committee members are appreciative of feedback and are open to any new ideas. By listening carefully, we hope to please all the members some of the time.

This opportunity to engage in dialogue with the membership, thus promoting a stronger sense of a Jungian community, is so welcome and helpful to members of the Board that we have decided to plan our annual meeting for 1993 as a party marking the end of the program year. On Sunday, June 6, from 6 to 9 P.M., we will sponsor a potluck supper followed by entertainment. This party will be at the University Heights Community Center, 5031 University Way N.E., in Seattle.

One of the Board's main tasks this year has been to update and upgrade the Society's bookkeeping. Over the years, the Jung Society has grown substantially, requiring more attention to the details of being a substantial nonprofit business. While our costs escalate in every area of program presentation, our membership does

Once Upon a Mid-Life: Fairy Tales and the Psychology of Men and Women at Mid-Life

Friday, May 7 • 7:30 to 9:30 P.M.

Cornish North • 1501 Tenth Ave. E.

$7 members, $10 nonmembers

Handed down over centuries, fairy tales are treasuries of folk wisdom. This lecture will focus on a unique and much-neglected group of stories that address the issues of mid-life. Tales from around the world will be retold and discussed, focusing on the contrasting psychological tasks men and women face in the middle years: transforming youthful ideals into practical action; breaking free of traditional masculine and feminine stereotypes; coming to terms with death, fate, and tragedy; and finding healing in a deep inner source of life.

Prince Charming and Cinderella Revisited: The Journey of Middle and Late Life in Fairy Tales

Saturday, May 8 • 10 A.M. to 4:30 P.M.

Cornish North • 1501 Tenth Ave. E.

$50 members, $60 nonmembers

This workshop will take a deeper look at fairy tales about mid-life and then introduce another group of stories specifically about old age. Tales from around the world will be retold and their meaning discussed. Fairy tales about mid-life address such issues as giving up the magic and innocence of youth; men coming to terms with their inner feminine, and women with their inner masculine; and finding creativity and renewal in the turmoil of mid-life changes. Fairy tales about later life emphasize confronting loss and despair; being open to the return of magic; and finding wisdom and spiritual illumination. In addition to storytelling and discussion, participants will have the opportunity to act out fairy-tale skits and use visualization to discover their own inner stories, awakening the storyteller within.

Allan B. Chinen, M.D., is a psychiatrist in private practice in San Francisco and associate clinical professor, psychiatry, at the University of California, San Francisco. He is the author of In the Ever After: Fairy Tales and the Second Half of Life and Once Upon a Mid-Life: Classic Stories and Mythic Tales to Illuminate the Middle Years, and a forthcoming book, Beyond the Hero: Tales of the Deep Masculine.

In 1988–89, I felt a personal need to find older women to talk with me about their life experience. Several of these women were Jungian analysts—all over 70. I chose these women in particular because of our shared language of the psyche. Not only did they give me the gift of an interview, but the invaluable gift of themselves. This will be an evening in which I hope to pass that gift.

Gaye Williams, Ph.D., is a Jungian analyst and a member of Jungian Analysts•North Pacific. She lives on Orcas Island.

not increase proportionally. At the same time, city, state, and federal laws have become more complex, requiring the assistance of qualified people for accounting and tax work. Such financial assistance is costly. Our treasurer, Marilyn Lamont, with the assistance of Diane Bogue and Bunny Brown, has worked many hours on our new financial plan, thus saving the Society a large portion of those costs. We are pleased to announce that this plan is now in effect. We owe Marilyn a generous thank you for her volunteered services.

Another task on this year's agenda was to secure continuing education credits from the Washington State Psychological Association for those who attend selected Society events. Again, these applications are costly, tedious, and time-consuming. Dr. Carl Robinson has successfully steered this task through the web of application requirements and now we are pleased to offer several events for continuing education credit. Certificates of attendance are also available at each event. Thank you very much, Carl, for your help and continued support.

Another topic under discussion this year has been the structure of our membership fees. Most lay societies such as ours do not charge attendance fees to members. Instead, such societies charge a higher annual membership fee of about $45 to $50. The bookkeeping is much simpler this way as the only money collected at each event is from nonmembers. The Board is pondering the benefits of this approach and welcomes any comments.

Being generally an intuitive and introverted group, Jungians are considered to be notoriously lax and confused in such areas as organization and detail. There are always many good ideas floating around at Board meetings, yet these tend to be forgotten or left undeveloped.

We on the Board have been blessed these past years with a person who has ably compensated this situation with concrete facts, figures, and all sorts of helpful data to assist in the decision-making process. In a way, I think Art Hopkins has had the doubtful honor of often serving as the conscience of the Board, a most frustrating role. The Board would like to thank him for the many hours he has given the Society.

Art is now going to England for a 6-month sojourn. We are all delighted in his good fortune while also sorry to see him go. With luck, he will be volunteering some time for the Society again next fall.

Bon voyage, Art.

Looking on to the 1993-1994 season, I invite interested members to consider filling vacancies on the Board of Directors.

We meet on the first Monday evening of the month for 2 hours at Cornish College North and generally have a summer retreat day for long-term planning.

Next year, Kurt and Margaret Vance will give up their leadership of the Hospitality committee. (He's the Greek scholar and she's the woman making those outrageous little creatures that look as if they came right out of a dream!)

Hospitality prepares the room for each event, makes sure the slide projector and lights work, sets up chairs, and prepares food, tea, and coffee for the workshops. The Hospitality chairperson pays no admission for lectures or workshops.

Other positions available will be the positions of Treasurer, Publicity chairperson, Newsletter chairperson, and Sound Recording chairperson.

If you are interested in any of these positions, please leave a message on the Jung Society machine, at (206) 525-3960, or call Kate Millard at (206) 367-7046.

On behalf of the Board, I would like to thank everyone who has participated in the workings of the C.G. Jung Society during this program year: the volunteers, the presenters, and the audience.

Enjoy the spring!
